Volunteer Tutors Teach Valuable Lessons

April is volunteer month and PAA would like to salute our volunteer tutors, who are the backbone, muscle and energy of PAA's Adult Literacy Program. Thirty-nine volunteer tutors currently give their time and skills to help immigrants learn to speak, read and write in English. Who are these everyday heroes?

There really is no "typical" tutor profile. Tutors vary in age, educational background and experience. The program is flexible to suit tutors' schedules and expectations and no specific time commitment is required. Most tutors meet with their students once a week for 2 or 3 hours. They often work one-on-one and never with more than 3 students at a time.

What and how tutors teach is entirely dependent on the students' needs. For instance, a tutor may concentrate on reading comprehension with a student who is in school or working toward passing a professional certification exam. With another student who works with the English-speaking public, a tutor may work on pronunciation and conversational English. In all cases, students learn grammar and sentence structure. And most likely, they work simultaneously on all of these elements of learning English.

What all tutors do have in common is a desire to help others. Volunteer tutors have their own goals in mind upon signing up with PAA. They may want to achieve personal satisfaction, meet students from Poland, reconnect with their Polish roots or give back to the community.

"Joe" volunteers simply because he wants to help. He is employed as a social worker at the Cook County Jail. Once a week, on his own time, he takes two buses to get to PAA's north side Learning Center to tutor "Jolanta." Joe is legally blind.

Together, Joe and his student Jolanta are working on conversational English and reading comprehension. Jolanta is a nurse from Poland. Because she has yet to receive her nursing certification in the United States, she currently works as a private duty nurse. She has been in the U.S. for 3 years. For one year she studied English on her own, but hit a wall when she realized she needed someone else's feedback to measure her progress and push her further. Joe is that person.

Their sessions consist of Jolanta reading stories of her own choosing—one recent reading was about the behavior of lions in the wild. When she finishes reading, she summarizes the piece, and Joe asks her questions to engage her in English conversation. She is making tremendous progress and very much enjoys her tutoring sessions with Joe.

If tutors like Joe are the backbone of PAA's literacy program, Urszula Cholewa is its central nervous system. Since the program's inception, Urszula has orchestrated it with skill, energy and sensitivity. She matches the needs of tutors and 100 students. Urszula meets with potential volunteer tutors to inform them about the program, identify their expectations and determine what kind of preparations they need. She provides individualized training, which may include refreshing tutors' knowledge of basic English grammar and familiarizing them with characteristics of Polish language and culture. She keeps in touch with all tutors and students in the program.

Urszula's organizational responsibilities are shared by Iwona Solomon, who coordinates literacy efforts on the south side, where the program began in 1989 with 20 tutors. When people indicated the need in the early 90s, the north side program was started.

The program is funded by the office of the Secretary of State, from whom it has received numerous commendations.

Joe is just one of a whole group of extraordinary tutors at PAA. If you would like to become one of them, you are very much encouraged to call Urszula Cholewa at (773) 282-8206, extension 408. Volunteering your time and effort to help someone learn to speak, read or write in English, could make all the difference. It could make life in the United States a little bit easier and a little bit friendlier.

Joe and Jolanta discuss a reading assignment at a recent tutoring session at PAA.

From the Chairman

Spring is the time of year when the days grow longer. The quality of light gradually changes the way we see the world around us. Newly formed buds stubbornly burst through the soil to say, "Look at me, I'm back!" Every year, the surprise and delight of spring brings new energy and optimism. Nature renews itself, and Easter brings the promise of new life. It is an annual miracle of new beginnings.

I am pleased to be serving as this year's Chairman of the Board of the Polish American Association, an organization that fosters positive change and provides new beginnings for people in need. In my 8 years as a PAA board member, I have seen it grow and adapt to the changing needs of the people it serves. Perhaps this ability to adapt is one of the most valuable qualities of PAA and the reason for its growth. PAA adjusts its programs to fluctuating immigration due to changing U.S. policy or political, economic and social changes in Poland and other countries. Immigration Services staff work evenings and weekends to accommodate clients' availability. They diligently learn new, complex policy and procedures and bring that information to clients through media outlets and direct services.

These changes have made PAA's Health Outreach Program more valuable than ever for people who are either unaware of or ineligible for health care. Our program provides clients with information about affordable health care and with services, such as screenings and immunizations. Welfare reform has created a greater demand for Education/Employment services. This quality program effectively trains and places hundreds of people a year in well-paying jobs. PAA's counseling services bring our clients suffering from depression, domestic violence or family communication problems an understanding of their situations and options for fostering positive change. You might say that all of our services provide the optimism of new beginnings that spring promises.

While the comparison between PAA's services and the newness of spring has its poetic merits, there is a difference. The Polish American Association does not hibernate during winter months! During Chicago's coldest winter days, our Turning Point program is a welcome presence in the lives of many homeless men. In our outreach program, they find the help they need to stay warm, clothed and fed, and to begin a path to a stable life. Starting Point, whose very name is evidence of new beginnings, helps our clients to begin the path to substance-free lives.

You can contribute to any of these programs today or refer to page 3 to learn about planned giving for the future. In doing so, you can make the transformation of spring a living reality in the lives of the less fortunate in our community.

The Winged Horsemen Are Coming!

Who or what is a "winged horseman"? A mythical creature? A Polish super hero? You can find out for yourself on June 5, 1999.

A suit of hussar armor, complete with feathers and leopard skin, along with 150 other works of art from Poland's Baroque Era will grace Regenstein Hall of The Art Institute of Chicago this summer. In addition to battle armor and battle gear, the exhibition, entitled "The Land of the Winged Horsemen: Art in Poland, 1572-1764," includes historic paintings of Polish royalty, images of the powerful magnate class, liturgical objects, sumptuous textiles, and Polish funerary coffin portraiture.

To mark the opening of this auspicious exhibit, the Polish American Association and the Warsaw Committee of the Chicago Sister Cities International Program will co-host a gala celebration on the evening of June 5, 1999. The evening's events include cocktails, buffet, live music from the era, informative lectures in English and Polish by the exhibit's curators, and an opportunity to view the exhibition.

This exhibition tells the dramatic story of Poland at a momentous and action-packed period in the country's history. Previous to this tour, the pieces in the collection had never been seen in one location; they indicate Poland's position at the crossroads of eastern and western Europe. During this period Poland was the largest land-empire in Europe and claimed a diverse population of Poles, Ruthenians, Jews, Armenians and Tatars, who embraced several different faiths. The Polish culture absorbed Turkish and Persian influences shown in the exhibition by costumes, Oriental rugs, a tent and weaponry. Poland also assumed the role of the "Defender of the Faith" against the neighboring Ottoman empire, as indicated by the magnificent liturgical objects and shrines to Mary. The best known of these is Our Lady of Czestochowa, and a 17th century version of the miraculous icon will be included in all her glory when the "Winged Horsemen" exhibition arrives in Chicago. Perhaps the most exciting aspect of this exhibit is that Chicago's 1 million residents of Polish ancestry will have the opportunity to share a part of their magnificent cultural legacy with the rest of the Chicagoland community.

If you would like to receive an invitation to the gala celebration of Poland's Winged Horsemen, please call (773) 282-8206; dial extension 313 for English, 0 for Polish. Tickets are $150 per person. The dress is black tie optional.

Leaving a Legacy

To keep a lamp burning we have to keep putting oil into it. — Mother Teresa

Have you prepared your will? Most of us would rather put off preparing a will. After all, it reminds us of our mortality, and who wants to think about that? But having a will is our opportunity to formally communicate the distribution of our hard-earned assets to those who are most important to us. In fact, if we die without a will, the government plays a major role in deciding who receives those assets and typically gets the biggest share of our estate. A will can be simple or elaborate, depending on each person's situation. And the cost of a lawyer to help prepare the will is minimal, considering the expense, uncertainty and time delay when there is no will.

In this issue of The Link, we initiate a series of articles on wills, bequests and other ways to manage our estate. These approaches fit into a broad category of personal financial management known as Planned Giving. Of the many planned giving tools available to us, a will is the most common. In future issues, we will further describe the use of wills and other instruments. We will also make available on your request booklets that describe planned giving approaches in detail.

Planned giving allows individuals who believe in the purpose and mission of an organization to insure their financial support long after they die.

The Board of Directors of PAA is in the process of establishing an Endowment Fund, which will be explained further in the next issue of The Link. The Board is also preparing a system of long term recognition and gratitude to individuals who include PAA in their planned giving.

If you plan to include PAA in your will or other planned gift, if you already have done so, or if you wish to receive more information on this subject, please send the enclosed reply card, or call us at 773-282-8206, Extension 313.

First Person with Stanley

Stanislaw Szymoniuk, "Panie Stasiu," is 79. He is retiring from his duties organizing PAA's Clothes Closet, which provides quality second-hand clothing for people in need. People bring in clothes and shoes they no longer need, and Stanley puts them into neat order and helps clients find what they need quickly and efficiently. Stanley also helps with PAA's Food Pantry, which every Wednesday provides food packages to needy families.

I love to work here. I can talk to these people. I've worked here for about 8 years. I was a shopkeeper in Poland, so I know how to organize inventory and help customers. I brought in pipes and tools and constructed what looks like a real closet, a large closet.

Stanley's contribution to PAA has been made possible by Project AYUDA, which employs seniors in nonprofit organizations. Facilitated by the National Association for Hispanic Elderly, AYUDA employs 1750 low-income seniors. It subsidizes their training, part-time employment doing community service, and placement outside the program. PAA has gained several hard-working employees through Project AYUDA, one of its many linkages with other agencies.
